A unique and timely set of circumstances create the perfect storm for a woman on the cusp of multiple changes.

Legally separated and unemployed with a year to kill.

Sammamish, Washington – With the help of divine inspiration, Jeanne Corvese Hussin decided to volunteer. It was the only logical choice given the extra time she found herself with when her conversations with men online proved fruitless. Unfulfilling was an understatement. Jeanne knew there was more to life, and she was about to find it.

Faced with multiple forks in her road, Jeanne had gone from married to separated and employed to accepting a year-long severance. She finally had the freedom to travel with her son, Jason. There was one problem, loneliness. It caused a ripple effect permeating Jeanne's nights with foreboding.

She needed an outlet for all of this extraneous time. She found her unlikely solution at a local assisted living facility volunteering her time to memory care residents in a ward ironically named Recollections. The characters she meets will color her world and yours in her new book, I See Old People®, a true story about how small acts of kindness lead us to extraordinary love and connections that defy our wildest dreams.

From the pages emerges a delightful cast of characters so rich in wisdom, you won’t soon forget them. When all seemed to have lost its luster, Jeanne said, “With a tiny bit of faith, there is a way. That gives me hope, it gives me courage, and it gives me the energy to encourage kindness and compassion. We can’t control most things that happen in our lives. We can only control our reactions. We can choose to be kind creatures. We all need to feel like we matter, no matter what age, no matter who we are.”

Equipped with her new lease on life, Jeanne finds love again in an unexpected twist. I See Old People® confirms that it’s never too late. It’s not just a book, it’s an experience that will leave you forever changed. Pick up this remarkable memoir and step out of the ordinary.

Jeanne Corvese Hussin is chief marketing officer for a financial services company based in Seattle. A compelling story teller, she has over 30 years' experience in brand marketing and public speaking. In her autobiography, I See Old People, she shows how to lead with compassion and shares her remarkable love story. Jeanne resides in Washington with her husband Joe and their two mixed dachshunds, Tasha Bear and Oscar. She volunteers her time visiting with seniors who suffer from dementia and enjoys spending time with her son Jason.
